

Types of Hearing Aids

Hearing aids are available in a range of styles suitable for all kinds of lifestyles and varying degrees of hearing loss. Your hearing care provider will make recommendations based on your unique hearing profile and lifestyle needs. Most styles have a rechargeable option.

Custom

Featuring some of the smallest styles available, custom hearing aids are made to fit the ear anatomy for exceptional comfort and sound quality. Custom hearing aids are best suited for those with mild-to-severe hearing loss.

Receiver-in-Ear (RIE)

The RIE, also known as receiver-in-canal (RIC), hides behind the ear and connects via a small tube to a tiny speaker in the ear canal. RIE/RIC is designed for mild-to-severe hearing loss.

Behind-the-Ear (BTE)

These models are slightly larger than RIE products and fit comfortably behind the ear. They are the most powerful hearing aids and are appropriate for the entire spectrum of hearing loss, from mild-to-profound.

Are You Experiencing Hearing Loss?

- Does speech sometimes sound muffled?
- Do you have a difficult time understanding words, especially in crowded or noisy situations?
- Do you frequently ask the people around you to speak more slowly and clearly?

If you answered yes to any of these questions, you could be experiencing hearing loss.

We make affordable hearing care accessible wherever you are. We have over 5,000+ locations nationwide where you can receive excellent care as you embark on your hearing health journey. Additionally, if you're outside of our area we provide at-home hearing care or 100% online, too.

What to Expect During Your Hearing Screening Appointment

- 1 Review your health history and lifestyle
Your hearing evaluation will begin with your hearing care professional asking you about your health history and lifestyle. These details play a role in determining which type of hearing solution will be best for you, if you have a hearing loss.
- 2 Complete your hearing evaluation
Your hearing care provider will use an audiogram to diagnose whether or not you have a hearing loss.
- 3 Review your evaluation and receive a recommendation for a hearing solution
Once the evaluation is completed, the hearing care professional will review your results, and if needed, recommend a hearing aid solution that fits your needs, lifestyle and budget. There is no obligation to buy.
